Gallucio Estate Vineyards

Passionate, full-bodied, and aged to perfection.

(And the wine is great, too.)

Meet Vincent Galluccio.

Just as a Stradivarius needs a gifted musician to make it truly sing, so too does a fine wine require a passionate presence to nudge its quality from merely excellent to exceptional.

At Galluccio Estate Vineyards, Vince is creating a special environment. One that has paid homage to the 16 year legacy of the award-winning Gristina vineyard while ushering in a new era of unprecedented vitality and sophistication to the Long Island North Fork wine growing region.

So, we hope the next time you're looking for something with a tantalizingly robust body and an excellent nose, you'll think of our Vince...so to speak.

FEBRUARY SALE

Bought your pillows & comforters elsewhere? Guaranteed you overpaid!!!

CAVEAT EMPTOR (BUYER BEWARE)

Don't be misled by advertisements for European goose down comforters at supposedly "SALE PRICES". We'll show you that most of those ads do not represent good values at all. Just because these advertisements are from major departments stores - do not be fooled-all down is not alike.

The quality of goose down is measured in fill power (also know as loft). Fill Power is the amount of cubic inches one ounce of down will fill. Our 800 plus Siberian Goose Down will fill between 800 and 850 cubic inches of space. "The Company Store" catalog always lists the fill power of their goose down. Bring in their catalog and we'll generally save you 50% off their prices.

Goose Down Comforters are an investment, with proper care a fine quality comforter will last a life time. Our high quality 100% cotton shells, or tickings, are divided into baffle boxes. The baffle box has a mesh channel separating the top from the bottom of the comforter. The baffle allows the down to give you maximum loft without collecting in one section of the comforter. We do not cater to the consumer that is more interested in price than quality. Our most valuable asset is our customer. We will only sell a product that we believe to be the highest value at the best price. Cheap low quality down should fill garage cans not pillows and comforters. All our goose down pillows and comforters contain 100% goose down even though it is legal to combine 70% down and 30% feathers and label the item 100% goose down. Remember feathers are those things with quills, down is similar to tiny balls of cotton, absolutely no hard quill. Our goose down comforters and pillows are machine washable because they only contain down.

The larger the individual down cluster the higher the fill power. The higher the fill power the better the comforter will insulate thus providing more comfort to you. Since you are spending 1/3 of your life in bed it should be as luxurious as possible. - Why not?

President Is Petitioned To Create A Park In Montauk To Honor Teddy Roosevelt

By Dan Rattiner

So much history took place in Montauk. And there is so little recognition of it. Throughout the town, which is a bustling summer resort of surfers, fishermen, vacationers and beachgoers, there seems to be so much to do, so much of the present to enjoy. What has gone before has been neglected. Consider some of them.

An attempt was made, back in the 1920s, to fly across the Atlantic to Paris from Montauk. It failed, though the fliers were rescued.

The American Army, flush with victory over the Spanish in Cuba in 1898, was in Montauk after the Spanish-American War. Teddy Roosevelt was here. President McKinley was here.

During the Second World War, Nazi spies came ashore one moonless night in a rubber boat paddled in from a submarine in the surf just west of Montauk Montauk. The spies were caught and hung.

Wyandanch, the chief of the Montaukett Indians, sold the eastern end of Long Island to Lion Gardiner here.

150 years later, a British Man-o-War, looking for a fight with a French frigate during the War of 1812, shipwrecked at Montauk. Her bones and cannon are still here.

It was George Washington who ordered the Montauk Lighthouse built.

These are not small town events. These are events of national importance. Yet few in our town knows of them.

This past summer, plans to create a World War II War Memorial in Montauk on a site that served as an army base were put forward by the State Parks Department. For about five years, deep in the woods, there was what looked like a small fishing village. But up close it bristled with anti-aircraft guns, shore batteries and, later, a radar tower. It's abandoned now. But it may soon be partially restored as a walk-through Memorial to our Veterans.

Americans died of malaria, dysentery, typhoid and yellow fever. When they were ready to go home, there was great fear they might set off a nationwide epidemic.

Now, the author of a book about the Spanish-American War has petitioned the President to create a park in Montauk to honor the heroes of the Spanish-American War here. The letter, sent by author Jeff Heatley, author of Bully! Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, The Rough Riders And Camp Wikoff, Montauk, was mailed on November 20, 2000, to President Clinton. The plan, in many ways, in my opinion, is a good idea.

1898, historians now say, is when America came of age, establishing itself as a great power in the world. That spring, the American Army mustered in Florida, 30,000 strong, boarded troop ships to Cuba, and much to the surprise of the rest of the world, succeeded in freeing the oppressed Cuban people from the brutality of the Spanish Empire.

It was the first time an American Army ever fought on foreign soil, and though successful, it was something of a botched job. There was massive confusion in Florida before the invasion, difficulties in transportation, supply and coordination. There was no shortage in bravery, however. And in the end, with the fighting done, the victorious American soldiers encamped for a month in the hills overlooking Santiago while the Generals negotiated a surrender in that town. Food, clothing and medicine were in very short supply. And there was nothing to prevent the ravages of tropical diseases on the men. Americans died of malaria, dysentery, typhoid and yellow fever while waiting in those hills. When they were ready to go home, there was great fear that they might arrive back in Iowa or Alabama or Massachusetts and set off a nationwide epidemic. It would be bad politics to delay the return of the troops, but President McKinley did what he had to do.

The men were going into a quarantine in a place called Montauk? Suddenly, the mood of the nation turned against the President and, particularly, his secretary of war, Russell A. Alger, who most felt had caused this debacle. There would be no parades. Indeed, the planned victory parade for the returning troops in Manhattan had to be cancelled. Instead, there would be just a cautious return. And many funerals.

The location of the return of more than 20,000 American troops therefore was not thought well of at the time. But it was a very big deal here. In early August of 1898, the first of more than forty troop ships arrived in Fort Pond Bay in Montauk, and

South O' the Highway (and North, too)

Actor/director Ed Burns of Wainscott (Private Ryan, The Brothers McMullan, etc.) has been getting all the raves, but his brother Brian is in the hunt too. Brian is completing a film he directed called You Stupid Man with a budget of $4 million. It was backed by Mike Ovitz's New Legend Productions.

According to real estate director Tina Fredericks of East Hampton, there is a new TV series in the works about the Hamptons. TV people have been spotted on various sites in the area.

Bridgehampton author Peter Maas, who recently has had two Number One best sellers, (The Terrible Hours and Underboss), is coming out with a new book that may be destined for Number One, entitled Abandon Ship. It's about a small cruiser, the U.S.S. Indianapolis, that was, without the knowledge of its captain, put in harm's way in the Pacific during World War II to distract and hold off about half the Japanese Navy. Which it bravely did for as long as it could.

Alec Baldwin and Peter Hallock have joined the board of directors of the Bay Street Theatre in Sag Harbor.

Who will sell the first $50 million house in the Hamptons? The present owners of Andy Warhol's old house on 27 oceanfront acres in Montauk might qualify, but no decision has yet been made by the owners to put it up for sale.

About twenty local artists will have works for sale this Saturday at the studio of Alex Echo in East Hampton for the opening of a show of erotic art. Alex promises pink wallpaper, and hors d'oeuvres of marshmallows, cherries, truffles, lollypops and you get the idea.

Christine Hawley of East Hampton is inviting some friends to a sneak preview of her newly completed "Enoteca" wine cellar on Thursday Feb.

SCIENTISTS MOVE THE MOON INTO A NEW ORBIT

Celebrating BNL

How Brookhaven National Lab Is Beaming Itself Into The Future

By Dan Rattiner

Big doings at BNL. This week we publish an overview. Next week Jerry Cimisi will begin a series of articles on the details.

There was a big party at the Brookhaven National Lab last month. It took place underground, in the big hall where everybody goes to watch the RHIC super colliden do its thing — which it has been doing a lot of lately.

"Brookhaven is probably the most exciting place to be right now," a physicist from Holland, holding a glass of wine, said between bites of crackers and cheese.

There was some discussion about whether the scientists at the CERN cyclotron in Europe were doing experiments the equal of those here at Brookhaven.

"They'll get their share of the discoveries," a mathematician from New Zealand said. "RHIC will get its share."

The Brookhaven National Lab, just west of Riverhead, is once again one of the great shining stars for theoretical research in the world. Early on, they were a leader in the successful attempts to unlock the secrets of nuclear fission. Then, for the last five years, up until last year, things went so wrong with how the place was dealing with its toxic and nuclear waste that it was nearly shut down. Now the work involves quantum physics, which holds the secrets to time travel. This is not a joke.

Because much of this was pioneering work, there was fear that there might be unexpected consequences. It would be best to do this in a very rural area.

The lab was founded in 1947 with the construction of the biggest cyclotron in the world. The cyclotron involved moving atoms at high speed around a circular track to bang them together. Because much of this was pioneering work, there was fear that there might be unexpected consequences. So it would be best to do it in a very rural area in case something went wrong.

Something did. For at least ten years, the scientists underestimated the effects of radiation. Experiments were held, not here, but in the deserts of Nevada, where people — soldiers — were deliberately exposed to its effects. Some of them died. Some of them led full lives but then died because of the accumulated results of the radiation. Actor John Wayne who filmed a movie in this area, also fell fictim to cancer, as did much of the cast and crew.

Larger and larger cyclotrons were built, and, because suburbia began to creep in around the lab, some of them wound up being built elsewhere. The lab was no longer in the forefront of subatomic research, but it still was quite formidable. Research in many areas, notably in medicine, were being carried out there.

Then, five years ago, small amounts of radiation were found in the Carmen River, which goes past the lab and empties into Peconic Bay in Riverhead. It was traced back to the lab, where the administrators of the place at first covered up what was going on, then failed to administer a clean up in a timely and orderly manner. That administration was fired. A new administration, under the supervision of Stony Brook University, was hired. And a massive cleanup of the place began. It was found that in the '40s and '50s they were just putting barrels of stuff out into the garbage not knowing how dangerous it was. And more contamination was found. Some containers, meant to safely hold toxic material, were rusting and developing leaks because of their age. They would have to be replaced. And they were.

It was during this time that there were demonstrations and speeches being made to shut the lab down. Many scientists left. One particular nuclear medicine treatment, used on patients who were desperately ill with cancer, was permanently shut down with the remark, by one scientist, that in twenty years it had not been shown to have done a single bit of good for any of these patients.

But now, BNL, as it is known, has been completely reborn. I have reported, in this newspaper, some absolutely astonishing things that the lab has been able to do in the last year and a half. In the summer of 1999, they announced they would conduct an experiment to re-create the Big Bang, the tiny explosion which grew and grew and resulted in the universe as we know it today.

There had been a lot of trepidation about this experiment. They were not attempting to re-bang OUR universe. The smashing of some high speed atoms would create a NEW universe. And they were absolutely certain that it would be created just for a moment, then would flicker, then go out. The experiment was successful.

In a second experiment, about six months ago, they were briefly able to transport a glass object from a table on one side of the room to a table on the other side of the room. It lasted only the blink of an eye. Then it went back.

Theoretical mathematicians long ago proved that objects have a temporal quality. Albert Einstein, when strolling on the campus at Princeton one night, said that he would look at the moon, and then quickly look away and then back at the moon to see if he could catch it not there. But working out quantum mathematics numbers on a blackboard with chalk was one thing. Working it out in reality was another.

And then, one month ago, scientists succeeded in demonstrating they could control the speed of light. A beam of light was fired (at the speed of light) into a container filled with a certain kind of gas. Then, almost instantaneously, a second gas was introduced into the container. The light STOPPED. Only when this gas was removed, which it quickly was, was the beam of light able to continue on its way, out the other side of the container and off into space. Light, which was believed to only travel at a constant speed, had been tamed.

Hopefully, all this fiddling around with time, space and light won't have unexpected side effects. But if you are sitting in the Golden Pear in Bridgehampton drinking coffee and reading a newspaper and you look up to see across from you a knight in full armor, broadsword and helmet looking as puzzled as you are, maybe something went wrong at the BNL.

But look on the bright side. Some day soon you'll be able to beam yourself from the Hamptons to the City and back. Using the same technology they developed on Star Trek. But don't tell this to the Hampton Jitney. It could upset them. •

How About "Radarkiller" Which Melts Police Radar Guns Before You Drive By

By Dan Rattiner

PC Computing Magazine announced the best products of the year last week. The overall winner was an object about the size of a pack of cigarettes that folded out into a full size computer keyboard. You'd attach it to a slot in the underside of your handheld device, and using it you could easily type data into the handheld.

This is, in my opinion, a pretty pathetic selection for the Product of the Year. For one thing, fold out keyboards have been around for several years, so it is not new, just better than the ones that came before. For another thing, there is nothing technologically advanced about this keyboard. People say that we are desperately in need of some new technology, some next level up, to reinvigorate the computer market, and get us back on the road of smaller and better and cheaper, which went on for thirty years beginning about 1970 and which ran out of gas at the end of 1999.

Computers are running dangerously close to being considered appliances – important household objects like washers and dryers which change little from year to year but get the job done. If this is true, the old energy and excitement days are over. Investment money made available for new economy start ups and dot-com research will have dried up for good. And the country will fall into recession.

Ah, but there is hope. Reporters for Dan's Papers have combed the world, and have come back with a terrific report about stuff in the works that will be out shortly and be candidates for the Best Product of the Year 2001. It's coming. Hang on. Help is on the way.

NUDEVIEWER is sure to be the toy of the year, at least for teenagers... instantly gives you the image of the person you are looking at stark naked.

THE BEAMER. Unlike the Beemer, which is the nickname for BMW automobiles, the Beamer is designed to eliminate BMWs altogether. Also every other automobile. Make a setting on the Beamer, a glowing, collapsible tube device not unlike the swords used by Darth Vader and Obi-Wan Kenobi, press a button, and be "beamed" from one place to another. You can disassemble your particles in Manhattan and reassemble them in East Hampton. In the blink of an eye. Just like that. Be sure to bring the Beamer, which retracts up enough to fit into a shoulder holster, with you. Otherwise it's a two hour Jitney ride home. Runs on two AA batteries.

RADARKILLER sits on top of your dashboard and sniffs out radar traps just around the bend. It does not make a noisy and distracting sound when it sniffs a radar trap as regular radar detectors do. Instead, using infrared technology, it attacks and disables the radar itself. The police radar gun heats up, explodes in a shower of sparks and then melts, leaving an ugly green plastic goo on the police car dashboard almost impossible to get off. You just whizz right by. Runs off your cigarette lighter.

RIGEL is still in the development stage, though a prototype was successfully operated for five consecutive commands at the old Xerox Research Center in Palo Alto. Rigel is a marriage of two very successful products already on the market. One is the metal robot dog, which was the hit of the 2000 Christmas season. You scratch its head and it barks, wiggles its ears and wags its tail. The other is the internet service you can call in many American cities to deliver a product to your door within one hour. Order RIGEL to bring you a six pack of Budweiser, and he is marching out the door, barking furiously, heading down the street to the local deli. Twenty minutes later he is back with the Bud. And the change. Runs on two AA batteries.

NUDEVIEWER is sure to be the toy of the year, at least for teenagers, during the Christmas season of 2001. Hidden in what look like cool shades (sunglasses) is a small computer which almost instantly gives you an image of the person you are looking at stark naked. It operates on a new computer principle called negative assumption. It observes clothes, makes decisions about the distance the body parts under the clothes are, constantly reevaluates these decisions on a four million per second timetable, and then firms up the decision and presents the person stark naked and animated to whoever is wearing the glasses. And sure, you can pass the glasses around. Runs on two standard C-15 disk batteries.

THOUGHTWRITER is a software program that reads your thoughts, organizes them, applies rules of grammar and essay writing, then puts the thoughts down on your computer screen. It automatically spellchecks. An advanced version has the ability to criticize your work. They are working on an even more advanced version that suggests alternatives. Comes with a headset. Runs on two AA batteries.

GAME MAN should be the toy of the year for the younger set during the Christmas Season of 2002. Basically, it is a shoot-em-up computer game set during the Dark Ages with dragons and wizards and giant toads to contend with. Runs on Play Station 2. The difference is that when "you" on the screen gets injured, the same thing happens to the "you" playing the game in real life. Good fun for kids, especially boys, between 8 and 13. Great fun for their parents, who after just one session, get to clean up the blood and nurse the kid back to health with the promise that they will never, ever play the game again. Don't press "die."

FOLDUP COMPUTER fits in your pocket. Set it out on the table and, like a work of origami, it unfolds, then unfolds again and again until you get the monitor, the monitor stand, the stereo speakers, the keyboard and the main computer box. Your business associates will be pre-sold to whatever it is you are selling even before you make your presentation as you come into the boardroom and unfold this thing. They will break out in spontaneous, enthusiastic applause as you, in a final gesture, flip out the glowing digital mouse from the back of the monitor, step back and take a bow. Runs on two AA batteries.

PRIVATEYE is a complete system that will allow you to video, for as long as you want, anybody you want. An excellent product for anybody who wants to see if their spouse is fooling around. Or for people who just want to watch to see what another person does. PRIVATEYE uses satellite technology developed by NASA and the CIA. It comes with tiny disposable microchip "bugs" that attach to somebody's clothes. All you have to do is tap them affectionately on the back and tell them to have a nice day. Use a split screen and watch more than one. Runs on two AA batteries.

BUYNSELL is a sophisticated Wall Street device which automatically buys and sells stock for you. It comes pre-installed on a wristwatch that defaults to a running stock ticker display. Find a stock you like, talk into a tiny microphone in the watch and your order is placed automatically. Comes with a loud warning device that screams LOOK OUT if you absentmindedly happen to step out into oncoming traffic. Runs on one C-15 disk battery.

THE ANSWER ACCOUNTANT is a spreadsheet and analysis program that helps Business Planners and corporate accountants put together budget proposals. But it works backwards. Start at the end putting in the total profit and profit margin you want for the year, stand back and it will automatically allocate the numbers backwards to make the month by month projections all work out. Even tells you who you have to fire. Excellent for presenting things to a CEO. Also, there is a simple-minded CEO version for presenting things to stockholders. Runs on MAC and

Rochester

Kodak, Xerox, The U. Of R., An Inferiority Complex And Some Not-Dead Ducks

By Dan Rattiner

People who know me know I occasionally sport a Harvard sweatshirt. It's because I'm an alumnus of a graduate school there. What is less known, because I don't make a big deal about it, is that I spent four years at the University of Rochester doing my undergraduate work. It's niftier being from Harvard than being from Rochester.

Nevertheless, thoughts of Rochester come to mind, often because of current affairs. I am sort of rooting for this city. At the present time, Rochester has been much in the news along with all over upstate cities as Rick Lazio and Hillary Clinton stumped there for votes. It has also been in the news recently because of extraordinarily awful developments involving Xerox and Kodak, the two biggest employers in that prosperous city. It is also a fact that if a patent ruling goes as expected, the University of Rochester will during the next ten years receive a windfall of more than a billion dollars, becoming the best endowed university in the nation.

But let me take it from the beginning.

Rochester, which is upstate's most prosperous city, conjures up jolly old England, Shakespeare and the classics. There was a time, however, when it conjured up the Negro sidekick to one of the nation's top comics, Jack Benny. He was a sort of sloppy step 'n fetchit character that was of a stereotype that would not be discussed today. It was during the heydey of Rochester, the negro, that I went there, hazed unmercifully by my fellow high school seniors, and, while there, by anyone playing a sport against us from another school. To give it a frame of reference, for about twenty years during Jack Benny's heydey on radio and TV, it would be like going to a college named after a Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle.

...if a patent ruling goes as expected, the University of Rochester will receive... more than a billion dollars, becoming the best endowed university in the nation.

The University of Rochester, back then, wanted more than anything else, to be recognized as a top drawer school of the order of Princeton or Yale or, at least, the University of Chicago. It did indeed have a world class Physics department, Chemistry Department, Optics Department and Music School. I majored in English.

The key to becoming more well known, it seemed to those running the school, who seemed to lack any marketing or public relations sense, was to get a good sports team, preferably a good football team, or if not that a good basketball team.

On the other hand, the school was not big enough to put together a good sports team. Furthermore, they refused to recruit. Thus, the football schedule featured games against Middlebury, St. Lawrence, Geneseo and our hated rival — I am ashamed to say this — Hobart. Can you imagine, going to a bonfire the night before a football game with Hobart?

We played the same teams in basketball. But because the season involved playing more than twenty games, we also got to play some of the schools we wished we were. If only we could beat them. I remember Rochester leading Cornell going into the last five minutes of play. Of course Rochester fell apart. I mean, it WAS Cornell.

The years I went there were the years immediately preceding the environmental movement. We had no idea the environment was in trouble when I went to college. Indeed, we had no idea what they did in the big physics building, where nuclear experiments were being carried under the auspices of the government, other than the fact that if the ducks in the little pond out front were seen floating dead in the water on any given morning, run for it. Indeed, that's why the ducks were there.

The City of Rochester itself was, and still is, the most prosperous in all of upstate New York. That was saying something back when I went to school. Bausch and Lomb was there. Kodak was, and still is, there. During my years there, I used a new-soon virtually the entire American army was bivouacked in tens of thousands of white tents set up in Montauk's rolling hills from one end of that peninsula to the other.

Montauk was chosen by President McKinley because it was almost totally uninhabited. A railroad line from New York City extended to Fort Pond Bay and a dock there. It would be the lifeline to the recuperating troops, who would stay on the peninsula for more than a month, to either recover with whatever medical aide could be brought to them, or die. Several hundred did die. And they are buried here, in graves and cemeteries that have long since been lost to the elements.

For the most part, however, the troops here were either exhausted and in tatters, or fully uniformed in robust health.

The arrival of Teddy Roosevelt, along with his Rough Riders, was a major media event in Montauk. Roosevelt was already a hero, he and his men having charged up San Juan Hill to send the Spanish fleeing in retreat, and Roosevelt's arrival date, August 15, was known ahead of time and attended by many newspaper reporters who came out from the city on the train.

"I am feeling disgracefully well," he shouted from the bridge of the transport as they tied her up to the dock. "I feel positively ashamed of my appearance when I see how badly off some of my brave fellows are." Then he paused. "Oh, but we have had a bully fight!" he concluded.

It is fair to say that for the thirty days between August 15 and September 15, when Camp Wikoff, as it was known — named after a General who had fallen in Cuba — was at its peak, there were more people residing on the peninsula of Montauk than at any time either before or since.

The encampment spread over an area ten miles long and four miles wide, and included the tents of all the soldiers, a cavalry area with pasture areas for hundreds of horses, mustering fields for the infantry, a post office, several field hospitals, a telegraph office and electric light powerhouse, general store, restaurant, officer's clubs and, off by the

Letter From Paris

C'est Une Lettre a Dan's Papers From El Publico And Editoire De Ce Journaux

By Dan Rattiner

Publisher and Editor Dan Rattiner and his other half, Art Curator Cat Squires are traveling through Europe, and filed this report Saturday, January 27, the day before Superbowl Sunday. It just arrived here yesterday and we rush it into print for today's late edition.

This is a letter from Paris. I've always wanted to write that. A hundred years ago, it was a tradition among newspaper publishers in America to go traveling abroad and then to write about it. John McCormick of the Chicago Tribune comes to mind. He traveled abroad about ten months a year and all his readers, stuck in Chicago, hated him. C'est la vie.

This letter, however, is only peripherally going to be about Paris. It is mostly going to be about Cat, my other half, who is an unabashed femme and not a bit interested in the Superbowl. This letter is also going to be about the Superbowl, or rather, How I Made the Incredible Mistake of scheduling a vacation in Paris to coincide with the Superbowl. The Giants are in the Superbowl, which is scheduled for six thirty five in the evening tomorrow, eastern standard time. I am in Paris where they are about as interested in the Superbowl as they are in the annual mud hockey championships they play in Vladistovok every June. I intend to watch the Giants take on the Baltimore Ravens. Or I hope to watch them.

It has been suggested by several Hamptonites who are in Paris at the same time we are but are not nearly as interested in the Superbowl as I am that I call Harry's Bar, or the Intercontinental or the Ritz and find out if they are showing it and if they are, Go There. I originally thought, three days ago when I realized that four days hence it would be Superbowl Sunday and I would still be here, that six thirty five p.m. eastern standard time translates to thirty five minutes past noon tomorrow, but it has been pointed out to me by Phil and Terry Baird of East Hampton who are visiting family on the Left Bank that I have the earth spinning the wrong way and that in fact the game will begin at thirty five minutes past midnight and will therefore end around four in the morning. I am prepared to do this. I have got to see if the Giants can defeat the Raven's vaunted defense.

"Ou est el primo entrade ala louvre? I asked, gesturing wildly. "Best way is to make a left..." the man said.

You may have noticed that certain French phrases have snuck into this letter from Paris. Surely, this is understandable, n'est pas? I studied French. French 1 and 2 in High School. Then in college, after a placement test, French 1 and 2 again. Not much sunk in. And I haven't spoken it to anybody in about twenty years. Nevertheless at least I have some French, which is more than Cat has. She speaks no French at all.

I will give you an example of the limits of my French. In the subway, which they call the Metro here, a woman at the other end of our car stood up and spoke loudly to everybody in French saying that she knew of this very good restaurant, which was open at seven, and that everybody should come there. I told Cat, who was standing next to me that this was a very interesting and new sort of advertising and maybe we ought to do this sort of thing in America. The woman then passed through the car with her hand out, begging.

"I think she's a beggar," Cat' said.

"Well then," I said, "perhaps she was saying she was going to sleep tonight without having eaten any food today and tomorrow morning at seven when she woke up she could use some cash to go to the restaurant."

Later, on that same metro ride, a man with a two day growth of beard and an accordion got on the train and began to play Broadway hits. He played "Hello Dolly" and "Oklahoma." I gave him the equivalent of twenty cents, or maybe it was twenty dollars. I'm not sure. He smiled.

"Gracias," I said.

Cat and I are staying at the apartment of an old friend of mine, Allison Bigelow, who I used to date years ago when I was single. We've kept in touch. Allison is in Sri Lanka for a month. She told me, by e-mail, that her apartment was free and come on over.

Allison's apartment is in Montmartre, which is roughly the equivalent of Greenwich Village, except it is on the outskirts of Paris, high on a hill, in one of the old stone buildings clustered around a big monastery that was built around 1535. You can see all of Paris from the steps of the monastery. It is the highest point in the City. Inside, the monastery, monks work in shifts, twenty-four hours a day, atoning for the sins of the Franco-Prussian War. When the war ended, they made a vow to do that. They keep their vows. I am not making this up.

We took the Metro to the Louvre this morning and spent practically the whole day there. The Louvre has what is surely the largest collection of paintings and statues in any one place in the world. The only other place I have ever been that is so large and so filled with treasures is the Hermitage in St. Petersburg, Russia. Mostly at the Hermitage, however, they have crowns and tiaras and jewels. Here they have Titians and DaVincis and Michaelangelos.

To give you an idea of the size of the Louvre, imagine the Metropolitan Museum in New York. It fits in a corner of Central Park. The Louvre is the size of Central Park.

We got off at a subway stop that said LOUVRE. And our first problem was finding where to get into the Louvre. We started down one street, following one wall of the building. Walked about a mile.

"It's a nice walk," Cat said. "We'll find the entrance."

We were only one tenth the way around. What if it was all the way around on the other side? I hailed a pedestrian.

"Ou est el primo entrada a la Louvre?" I asked, gesturing wildly.

"Best way in is to make a left by that red banner," the man said, pointing.

"Where are you from?" I asked.

"Connecticut," he said.

"I told you if we kept walking we'd find it," Cat said.

Cat believes that whatever you want, if you just keep walking, it will eventually turn up. It's a totally alien concept to me. I am all outfitted with maps and papers with exact directions.

Cat wanted to see the Mona Lisa. I thought that was a great idea. I pin-pointed it on an air view drawing of the building. But she went off in the

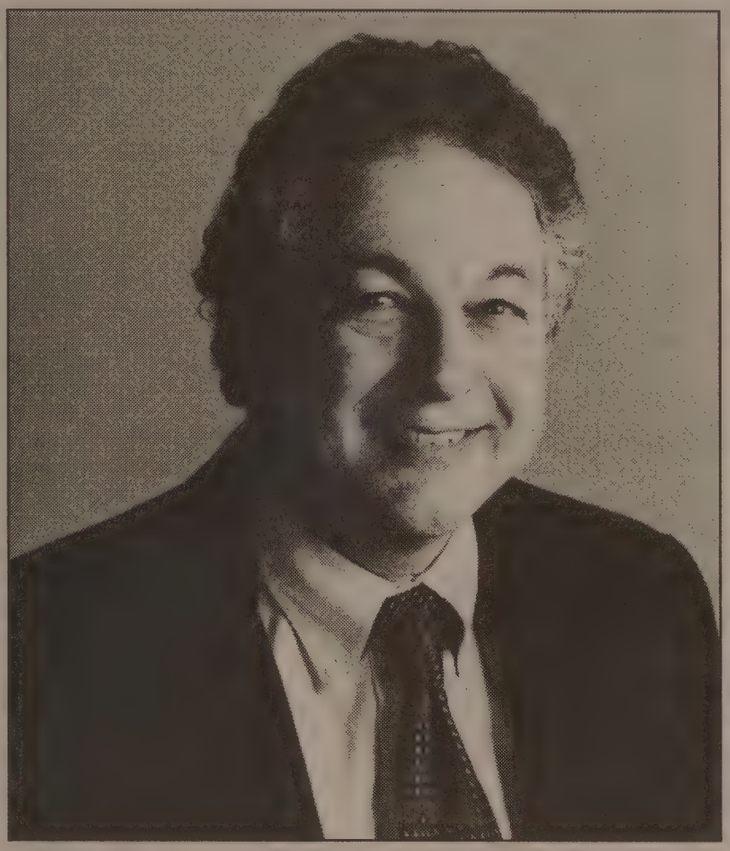
Who's Here:



Jeffrey Garten

Dean At Yale

By Susan Simm

"CEOs are major actors in the drama called globalization," writes Jeffrey Garten, Dean at the Yale Business School of Management, in the introduction to his newly published book, The Mind of the C.E.O.

"We talk a lot about globalization as if it were an abstraction, but it means that we are living in one global economy," he commented in a recent interview. "The people who have made this happen are the heads of multi-national companies:" the CEOs. Mr. Garten, who is both direct and supremely eloquent, should know: he has led his life on a global stage.

In response to a recent New York Times article about his new book, in which the critic accuses Jeffrey of pandering to potential patrons by saying that, "business school deans do not prosper by giving affront to corporate patrons," Jeffrey responds with typical candor. "I'd like to think that this book raises some very frank issues relating to our global CEOs. Sometimes, professional journalists feel that if they're not highly critical, then they're not being honest. This book wasn't meant to be an expose."

Here, Jeffrey Garten speaks out about his views on politics, past and present, the future of international trade, the Internet, and the necessity of corporate social responsibility.

His belief that these global giants, the multinational corporations, have a social responsibility to the world at large, aside from financial accountability to shareholders was a motivating factor for Jeffrey to write his recent book.

"I feel that these big companies are not only economic organizations, but social ones as well. When you look at the kinds of problems that exist around the world today, governments alone are not going to be able to handle them. There is a kind of governmental assumption, because we live in a very market-oriented economy, that somehow businesses are going to take care of these problems.

"But you can't be too romantic about this because business leaders are under very powerful constraints as investors hold them to ever-increasing profit targets and dump them at the first sign that they can't achieve them," said Jeffrey. "I would like to see these leaders play a broader role, not out of some ideological sense, but because it's not clear who else can."

Born on the eve of his father's departure for Germany during the occupation following WWII, Jeffrey spent his childhood in Germany and in the US, moving around in the manner of military families. After serving as a Green Beret in the US Special Forces in Thailand during the Viet Nam war, he attended Dartmouth and Johns Hopkins, from which he received a Ph.D.

He began his career in the political arena of Washington, in the administrations of Presidents Nixon, Ford and Carter. After moving to New York, he became an investment banker for Lehman Brothers.

Jeffrey's banking career was a very international one. He lived in Asia (in Japan and Hong Kong), for 3 years, spent a lot of time in Latin America and helped Costa Rica's government restructure its debts. After being offered the senior position of Undersecretary of Commerce for International Trade by the Clinton administration, he left investment banking for a position he felt well qualified for.

"I loved Wall Street, but my wife said, 'you may never be offered something like this again,' so I took it. And I had a great time," said Jeffrey.

"I was right in the middle of the evolution of the Clinton trade policy. We played a very tough game, much tougher than previous administrations, particularly in promoting American exports. We used the power of the US to force other governments to favor American firms, and that part was OK, because we all felt, in the Clinton administration, that other governments were helping their firms and that the US had been very naïve.

"But we went beyond that, preaching to other governments and twisting their arms, that they ought to open their economies, like ours is. But they weren't ready, and when they opened their economies, they didn't have the necessary laws and regulations in place to protect them."

Some of the results were disastrous. In 1997, the so-called "Asian Crisis," caused by the failure of the banking system, precipitated a decimation of economies that spread around the world.

"In the book, I say that the US can be much too arrogant in assuming that other countries can be like us. They are not as big and they don't have the regulatory systems we have. We pushed too hard. I'm not saying this from an ivory tower. I was right there, in the middle of the action."

Although NAFTA was forged during the Bush administration, Jeffrey and his collegues in the Department of Commerce were responsible for the addition of two provisions, regarding labor and the protection of the environment. "These were and remain contentious. Especially among Republicans."

What is the future of US trade with Mexico and Canada? "The long term trend here is that there will be one North American market. Mexico will be like a US state. The borders between Canada, Mexico and the US will be opened, maybe not in the next five years, but it will happen."

When asked how he went about doing the research for his book, which he will be discussing and signing this Saturday at BookHampton in East Hampton, Jeffrey said that he had decided to interview CEOs who would be known to the general public by name or by the name of the company they run.

"I decided, in order to make it a reasonably legitimate sample, to cut across industries. There are about 10 industries represented here. I also wanted all of the CEOs (forty in all) to be overseeing businesses that were global," said Jeffrey. He proceeded to send out 36 letters, hoping to get a positive response from about 12.

"To my surprise, everybody said yes! It may be because they all wanted to know what the others thought, I don't really know." It may also be because he is a respected member of the international business community. Author of three previous books and columnist for BuisnessWeek magazine, Jeffrey readily admits that he is not exactly an "unknown quantity."

One of the major points that Jeffrey addresses in his book is the difficulty of the new global CEO's job in the New Economy. He used Michael Armstrong [CEO of AT&T] as an example to show how you can have a great vision and still not succeed.

"When I went to his office, he talked about AT&T

"This led me to the conclusion that it's no longer the sexy idea that matters, but rather the ability to make it happen."

being the only telecommunications company you would ever need. He picked up a cell phone and started telling me about all the things this cell phone would do. He actually opened it up, and inside, it was a computer. He got me really excited.

"These days, you need that kind of dramatic vision or no one's going to notice you. Armstrong had an exalted vision, not about technology, but about how the world would change [as a result of this technology]. But the trouble was, he couldn't make it work.

"This led me to the conclusion that it's no longer the sexy idea that matters, but rather the ability to make it happen. Armstrong, who was considered to be the most prominent CEO in the country only two years ago, is now fighting for his job."

AOL Time Warner Chairman Stephen Case (also interviewed for Jeffrey's book) sums up this phenomenon perfectly: "A vision without an execution is just a hallucination."

When asked about the Internet and its future role in global corporate business, Jeffrey likened its invention to that of the telephone. The telephone changed the world, and the Internet will too, he feels, but this won't happen overnight.

"Many of the dot-coms pretended to challenge big companies, but they lasted a year and now they're gone. When the CEOs I interviewed were talking about the Internet, what they were saying was so at odds with what the media was saying that these CEOs sounded extremely dull. In fact, they had their fingers on the pulse: they were focusing on the real stuff, not the hype."

Speaking of hype, Jeffrey feels that we, as citizens, are tired of it. He feels that, in some ways, Clinton "was the master of hype." He continues, "we want to see things actually happen, we want people to deliver on what they say. But we're also hypocritical because we don't pay attention unless what they're saying is dramatic, and the more dramatic, the less likely it is that something will happen: it's a catch-22.

"Up until a few months ago, everybody believed all the hype about the Internet. Now, people are saying, 'show me it's real.' We've had tremendous skepticism that big ideas can actually work."

The sunny kitchen of the East Hampton home Jeffrey shares with his wife, Ina, owner of the fabulous food store Barefoot Contessa and noted cookbook author, is instantly familiar. I had just seen it in this month's Martha Stewart Living, accompanying an article written by Ina about a Valentine's Day dinner party. Over coffee, I asked Jeffrey what he thought about how Clinton behaved as he left the White House and what he thought about the incoming administration.

"Like everybody else, I'm tremendously disappointed with the way Clinton handled his departure. In a couple of days, he reinforced negative views about his lack of personal judgement; it's almost incomprehensible how the same person could have been so skillful and statesmanlike in understanding the world's problems."

And the new administration? "I think right now it's a big question mark. Bush could emerge as a great president, a Harry Truman-like person of the people, or he could be a total disaster. I think either of these is a real possibility at this moment." • fangled thing called a copier built by a small firm in town called Haloid-Xerox. The residents of Rochester were well-to-do, nevertheless, they really did know that all they were was some backwater upstate city. Rochester had an inferiority complex. When people asked you where you were from, you said Rochester. Then you apologized for it.

One thing we did have, in huge quantities, was snow. Vast quantities of it. I remember one year going with some friends to the parking lot where I parked my car and having to poke sticks down to hit the roofs of the cars. We'd dig down. When we got to a green one, we looked further. I had a green one. Eventually we dug it out. But we couldn't take it anywhere. We just dug it out so that on another day when the roads got plowed we could go somewhere.

I think the snow made for a conservative approach to life. Or something made for a conservative approach to life. Kodak has been a company who's fortunes I have followed over the years. Other than having the photography film market sewn up, just about everything they've tried over the years from then to now has been a failure.

They got hysterical when Dr. Edwin Land founded the Polaroid Company and made instant pictures. They infringed on his patent to create their own instant picture cameras, got sued, failed to beat him in the marketplace, and then had to pay millions of dollars to Polaroid and go out of business when they lost the patent infringement lawsuit.

They tried going into the computer business, the copier business, the music business and, most recently, the digital camera business, all with disastrous results. They failed to adequately respond to a challenge from Fuji for marketshare in their film business and lost their monopoly. With some frequency, they've done restructurings involving massive layoffs. They seem to be about to go that route again in the next month or so. They remain a one note company. And if film ever goes out, they're sunk.

The other major company in Rochester was, for a longtime, Xerox. It was founded there. Its copier business skyrocketed from there. Then they did this weird thing, which was to remove their corporate headquarters to a campus in Connecticut while leaving the bulk of the company up in Rochester. Maybe they were trying to get away from the conservative and unimaginative thinking that seems to emanate from that city. I don't know.

But now Xerox is in big, big trouble, almost for the same reason as Kodak. They are a one note company. And amazingly, they have remained a one note company in spite of some of the most remarkable inventions of the computer age. It was at a research facility at Xerox that the computer mouse and the screen point and click arrow was developed. It was at a research facility at Xerox where the original "Windows" program was developed. Bill Gates visited Xerox's research facility and was startled by what he saw. He asked Xerox if he could buy the rights to it. The bigwigs in Connecticut (or Rochester) said the mouse and the windows weren't worth the screen they were displayed on. They shut down the research. Then they sold the rights for a song. In the next few months, Xerox may actually go into bankruptcy.

Will the City of Rochester become a depressed area? Maybe.

On the other hand, researchers at the University of Rochester have received a patent for something that the medical community calls SuperAsprin. It has all the positive benefits of aspirin, without any of the side effects. A challenge to the patent has survived a lower court ruling. It is expected to survive all appeals. Within five years, you won't get aspirin. You will get SuperAspirin. And the licencing fees will make the University rich beyond it's wildest dreams.

Maybe I'll even start wearing a U. of R. Sweatshirt. Maybe the U. of R. will be invited to join the Ivy League. •

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

OBSERVATIONS OF AN ISLANDER # 142
THE DELI QUEEN

I'm sure you've heard of the Dairy Queen chain, and it would be nice to have a chain store of any kind, but it's against Island policy. So we start our own chains. Okay, so they only have one link, but it's the thought that counts.

West Neck Deli reopened just after New Year's as the West Neck Island Market, but to me, it's the Deli Queen, they might as well just rename it now. Enter Gail Heinze the little blonde dynamo owner/operator as the "Deli Queen."

I went into the completely revamped deli this week for the first time. The floors are stripped and polished. Everything is clean and new. It is so well organized I wanted to know if she charges to come to your house and do this! The most accessible item, immediately to your left as you come in, is ice. Bags and bags waiting for you. Everything is arranged in such a way that you still have the feeling of space despite the incredible stock she has on hand. She has all the standard guy stock; beer, cigarettes, beer, snacks, beer, mustard & ketchup, beer, imported beer and beer. Then there's the really important stuff for gals; flavored coffee creamer, Sobe's, cheesecake, regular & specialty foods in a nice variety. The kind of stuff you tend not to see in the IGA because the choices are so many, here, all this tasty stuff just leaps into your arms.

But this is not your average deli... this is a deli run by a Mom, with four kids no less! So, in addition to male survival items; cigarettes, lighters, beer and chips, are female survival items; tampax, motrin, kiddie toothpaste and toothbrushes, Q-tips, bandaids, sunscreen, chapstick, calamine lotion and even creme rinse.

The survival item coup de gras was Dennis Rafflelock's new soft jazz cd. (I have been listening to mine since I got it. Do yourself a favor and get that cd!) Not only can any man run in here five minutes before closing and get what he needs, but any woman or mom can whip in here and stave off any natural disaster. I was truly impressed.

Then I got to the Holy of Holies, the deli counter itself....pans and pans of fresh salads. Very serious potato salad with chunks of egg and bermuda onion. Chicken, tuna, seafood salad. Chicken cutlets, and alot more. I can recommend the macaroni salad. Chunks of sweet red pepper big enough to actually see! I also ordered the meatloaf. That was a test. Normally deli meatloaf gives you heartburn. It's a fact of life. Not Gail's. I was so pleasantly surprised. Whatever kind of tomato sauce she adds to it seems to be low acid. It's delicious, you can serve it to your company without Tums.

She has a terrific list of sandwiches; Reuben, Russian Hero, Italian Hero, Italian Roast Beast Hero, Grilled Chicken Wraps, Mexican Wrap, along with all the old standbys.

I wondered how she could be expert at such a variety of specialty sandwiches? I'd never remember all those combinations. Well, it seems the Deli Queen comes by her name honestly. Her Dad owned a Deli in Queens, Glen Cove and Hauppauge. All her summers were spent slicing, dicing, stabbin 'em and slabbin 'em. This gal's got mayonnaise in her blood. She's owned her own deli before off Island. She spent a brief time as a Dental Hygienist for her husband, Glenn Heinze, DMD, FAGD (dentist) in Sag Harbor. But the sound of the meat cutter called out to her over the sound of a drill and when the West Neck Deli came up for sale, our girl came back to her roots. Deli. "Deli high will call you,..... from the West Neck Road.... come to me, your special Island, come to me, come to me....."

This deli is not going to fold like so many Island businesses. This is going to really flourish. It's a perfect location, right next to North Fork Bank, very easy to pull in and out. Coke machine in front.

As a bonus, her husband, Glenn Heinze, DMD FAGD is going to open a satellite dental office here and he's bringing nitrous oxide! I personally need nitrous to make an appointment so I am really looking forward to having him here. I'm just thinking of the promotions they could run for each other. "Free Reuben and coke with your third filling!", "Cap off your lunch with a new crown!", "Brace yourself for a big Wrap!" I can see it all now... • opposite direction, fascinated with some sculptures by DaVinci. One of them was of two slaves. Another was a woman and a man entwined. I tried to tell her we were going the wrong way but she wouldn't listen. We saw the Winged Victory. We saw paintings by Delacroix. Eventually, because we got lost and went the wrong way, we got to the Mona Lisa. Go figure.

"The Louvre is four stories high," I told her as we went out the door, "and is a central hall with, let me see, a total of eight different wings of stuff. We spent all day in one wing and got to just two floors. That's two thirty seconds of the Louvre. At that rate, we could spend sixteen days here."

"Let's find a restaurant," she said, marching ahead.

"There's one over there," I said.

"Too close to the Louvre," she said. "It'll cost a fortune. Let's go THAT way."

We went ten blocks. Passed six restaurants. It was starting to drizzle.

"I'm thinking Chinese food," she said.

At one point, I was absolutely certain we were heading far away in the opposite direction from the metro stop that would take us up to Montmartre. I stopped an asked a gendarme (policeman to you) which way it was. He told me. I felt relieved.

"Now maybe you'll enjoy the walk," Cat said.

Back at the apartment around ten p.m., I plugged a lamp into a wall outlet in the bedroom and sparks and fire shot out. All electricity is two twenty in Europe. Powerful stuff. The whole apartment went dark.

"I think I blew a fuse," I told Cat.

"I think all of Paris has gone dark." she said.

"What makes you think that?"

"I hear a dog barking. Go outside on the terrace and look. I'll find the fuse box."

I came back inside. "It's still the City of Light," I told her.

Resetting the fuse box worked, but the outlet was dead. So were the other three wall outlets in the bedroom. It suggested there might be a burnt wire in the wall somewhere.

Cat began straightening the apartment. In case the apartment caught on fire, she said, she wanted the place to look neat for the firemen. Maybe she should put up some coffee.

It's the little things that can bother you when you travel. For instance, I want to get the number for Harry's Bar but how do you call information? Allison has a telephone she told us to feel free to use. Quattro, uno, uno? Je pense non.

Next week it is off to Venice to link up with Dario and Gabriella Mariotti of East Hampton, and the week after that we spend time with American Ambassador to Slovakia Carl Spielvogel and Barbaralee Diamonstein-Spielvogel of Southampton in Bratislav.

Lots of Post-Superbowl parties, I'm sure. •

TALKTHEN is a time-delaying cell phone device which enables you to talk now but have the listener hear what you have to say in their time zone at the time you said it in your time zone. For example, you could be talking to somebody in L.A. while watch the sun set in New York and say into the telephone "boy, we are having an absolutely great sunset" and three hours later, when the sun is setting in Los Angeles, they will finally hear you on the cell phone say "boy, we are having an absolutely great sunset." Runs on two AA batteries.

CHESSADVISOR is the chess expert's answer to playing a chess game against a computer. CHESSADVISOR knows exactly how a computer thinks. The computer moves, and CHESSADVISOR whispers in your ear exactly why the computer moved the way it did and what you can do to counter it. Comes with headphones and a toggle switch that gives you either "bottom line" or "detailed explanation." Runs on eight AA batteries.

LITTLEVOICE RESPONDER. This is a remarkable piece of audio software that comes with an antenna, a headset and a handheld device that fits in your breast pocket. You know that little voice you sometimes hear in your head? "Boy, look at Phil's wife. Ain't she a beauty? I'd sure like to get her in the sack." LITTLEVOICE RESPONDER comes pre- programmed with factory set "consensus ethics" (tm) that can be re-set as Ten Commandments, Koran, New Testament or Talmud. If you don't want to covet another man's wife, (Commandment Nine), LITTLEVOICE RESPONDER helps you. Midway through your little voice's statement of attraction, it interrupts. "Shut up. Stop thinking that way. Wrong, wrong, wrong." Of course, you can pre-select LITTLEVOICE RESPONDER to respond to just nine of the Ten Commandments. Or Eight. Or whatever. Runs on prayer and one AAA battery.

CELL PHONE CHOPPER. Slowly but surely, rules and regulations are being passed in the country limiting the use of cell phones in automobiles. The idea is not to hold a cell phone to your ear. Keep both hands free. The Cell Phone Chopper is a device that attaches to the top of your cell phone and keeps it buzzing around inside your car. It uses helicopter technology, miniaturized, along with technology developed by the "Clapper." Hear the phone ring, clap once and it buzzes over from where it's hovering at its home base just over the dashboard on the passenger's side. To end the phone call, clap twice and it buzzes back. It has been noticed that during the clapping procedure both your hands are off the steering wheel and so they are working on a more advanced model that you call with a voice command. Presently, lab technicians are trying to work out a stubborn glitch that occasionally confuses talking on the phone with the voice command, thus sending it choppering away prematurely. Runs on two AA batteries. • how gossip became the news and the news became just another story.

You did hear it first here. Ed Harris just blew us away out here in last fall with the premier debut (screening) of Pollock. Yes, even though we tend to stand by our local boys who do well, this over shadowed any local pride of Jackson Pollack. Ed Harris was Jackson Pollock. Does this mean that Hollywood recognizes a small (almost independent film) and hold him up as an award-winning actor for this role? Hell, yes. He got the nomination for Best Actor. He's already won the Oscar in our eyes. Congrats, Ed.

We sometimes label heroes as people (mostly men) who have done extraordinary things that have improved life (large or small scale). A hero, or should we say heroine, that, because of the time in our American society, left to make her entertainment career in France. A woman of color, she took Paris by storm, with an ingenious strategically well placed bananas as a skimpy costume. She was funny as a comedian and yet could bring tears to your eyes with those soulful eyes singing a French song. Okay, you've guessed, it's Josephine Baker. But did you know she was a part of the Intelligence Resistantance Force from France during the war? She didn't file papers, she put her life on the line taking risks that were so heroic...France is just now crowning her achievement by having a boulevard in Paris named after her. Her loving gesture of adopting ten children, all from different parts of the world, her "Rainbow Family" was a loving living legacy she left behind. To our dear friend (one of ten!) Jean Claude Baker, famous restaurant owner Chez Jospehine in NYC , we send you a most heartfelt congratulations.

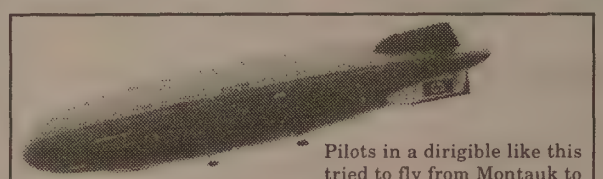
bay, an encampment for the artillerymen and their cannons. The headquarters of the encampment was Third House, one of the few permanent structures in Montauk. This building, five miles from the dock at Fort Pond Bay, still stands and is filled today with photographs and memorabilia from the days it served as Army Headquarters.



Pilots in a dirigible like this tried to fly from Montauk to Ireland in 1924.

The center of activity, however, near where Mr. Heatley proposes the establishment of the national park, was the Bay and the Dock and its adjacent railroad station.

The editor of The Riverhead News, G. Hilda, described the scene on September 24, when many of the troops were beginning to muster out.

"The long railway platform swarmed with passengers just in from the train and mingling with the crowds of soldiers in the blue and brown uniforms. A pandemonium of sounds rose on the air. The greeting — noisy and sincere — of the soldier boys to their comrades returning from their furloughs, the shouts of teamsters, the hum of hundreds of voices, the braying of mules, the rush and rumble of army wagons and the various and many shades of color formed a medley which stunned the sense of hearing and dazzled the eye. Out in the harbor, the big, boxlike transport ships, riding quietly at anchor, loomed up, black and massive, through the mid-day haze..."

During the two months of Camp Wikoff, there was a great outpouring of help from the citizens of the small towns of Long Island nearby. A red cross contingent from Southampton set up two field hospitals. Food, clothing and supplies were brought in daily, donated by the residents of Riverhead and Westhampton Beach. In the towns of Amagansett, Sag Harbor, East Hampton, Bay Shore, Oakdale, East Islip and Islip, auxiliary hospitals staffed by local doctors and nurses were established. And on one occasion, when a troop ship carrying men from the Massachusetts Naval Reserve ran aground at Napeague, hundreds of local residents came to help the Rescue Service fire the long lines and carry the men ashore.

The last of the troops, the Seventh Infantry, was mustered out of Camp Wikoff on October 2, 1898.

Author Heatley proposes a highly imaginative, though certainly fictional, "Camp Wikoff" on the shores of Fort Pond Bay that would include a re-creation of the Montauk Station, hospital, horse stable, museum, general store, pier and restaurant, together with tours, band music, bugle calls and occasional re-enactments of, for instance, Roosevelt's troopship landing, horseback riding and wagon rides, speeches and other colorful attractions. He proposes the involvement of Second House, which certainly makes sense, but he also proposes the involvement in several other parts of town, including a huge oceanfront park preserve for a memorial pavillion which to the best of my knowledge had no special connection with Camp Wikoff.

It is important to remember that so many different aspects of history are overlayed one upon the other here in Montauk. The parcel Heatley suggests for the re-creation of "Camp Wikoff" for example, is available for sale it is true, but was formerly known for its role in a United States Navy Torpedo Testing Station that existed on the site during the Second World War.

Many years ago, I obtained a pen drawing of a map of all the different buildings and tents that comprised the Spanish- American War encampment here. I set aside one afternoon to explore a particular part of it, where the map said the Camp Wikoff laundry was located, at a spot in the brush on Fort Pond right behind where the Montauk Movie Theatre is today.

I foraged around in the bushes there for about an hour. I had hoped to perhaps find brass buttons or medals that might have fallen off some of the soldier's uniforms while they were being laundered. I emerged with nothing but cuts and scrapes from the brambles and stickers, many mosquito bites and the realization that I had made the astonishing discovery of an enormous concrete platform just below a thin layer of earth which could be nothing other than the platfrom of the dirigible hanger used in the failed attempt to beat Lindburgh flying from America to Europe in the 1920s.

History is everywhere in Montauk. We should, carefully, preserve all of it we can. We probably need a committee of people knowlegeable in history to oversee this. •

KATLEAN de MONCHY

If you're hungry for a scary movie then Hannibal is one you can sink your teeth into. It is hard to conceive that gore and grace can go together but Anthony Hopkins makes it happen. The New York premiere of Hannibal took place last week at the Ziegfield Theatre and it was a true Hollywood style event except it was more casual and it took place in New York, of course. Julianne Moore replaced Jody Foster as the co-star saving MGM enough money to bid for Derek Jeter for one season. And speaking of sports, the greatest was there, Mohammad Ali. There was so many stars that I will be pissing off a few by omitting them because of space, so I opted for Hamptons people first and formost.

1. Anthony Hopkins the star of the film
2. Muhammad Ali
3. Julianne Moore
4.Peter & Loraine Boyle
5.Lauren Bacall
6. Alec Baldwin
7. Al Roker
8. Regis Philbin
9. Julian Schnabel & Christopher Walken
10. Emma Thompson
11. Ron Perelman & Ellen Barkin
12. Gary Oldman
13. Gina Gershon, Rob Morrow, Julianna Marulies & Ron Eldard
14. John Mosely & Jason Sehorn
15. The stars and the suits

OXYGENE

Lanvin launched its new fragrance "Oxygene" at a party at the Tribeca Rooftop in trendy downtown. When you arrived, it seemed like a Studio 54 scene where partygoers behind the velvet rope were demanding or pleading to get in. Upstairs, it was a "who's here, I'm here" simuliar to what goes on at the hottest clubs downtown. And don't forget, this was to promote a new fragrance...there's nothing like a little publicity and a hot guest list.

1. Rebecca Romijn Stamos, Lanvin designer Christina Ortiz and Exec. Jack Wisnall 2. Nikka Costa, who performed for the guest 3. those Hilton girls 4. Angie Harmon and covering all those parties, Jason Sehorn 5. always smiling, Ann and Mick Jones 6. Rashida Jones, see the Peggy Lipton resemblance 7. the ever boyish Donny Osmond 8. Michael Michelle 9. Shiva Rose & Dylan McDermott 10. the ever beautiful Dayle Haddon 11. the multi jacketed Micheal Rappaport

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

CLASSICS 1

It seems that it's the time of year when every car magazine copies one another and picks what they consider to be the best cars of the previous year. Because this column is more or less about classic cars, please bear with me as I pick what I believe to be the best classic vehicles of the last fifty years, starting with the earliest and ending with fairly contemporary machines.

Circa 1949 MG-TC. Americans came back from the big war with lots of memorabilia, like Lugers, bayonets, and little MG motorcars. The TC literally started the sports car movement in America. I owned a TC and a TD, and they are both wonderful rides. They had only 54 horsepower, but on a hot summer's day, with the windshield folded down, squinting at the road as the wind blasted your face making your eyes tear, somehow horsepower didn't seem important.

1949-on Volkswagen Bug. The early 1200s were only 36 horsepower strong, had strange looks and air-cooled engines in the wrong place, in the trunk! Compared to the Buicks and Oldsmobiles of the era, the diminutive Volkswagen handled like a sports car. Everybody at one time owned a Bug. They were fun to drive, and most important, affordable. They were considered by many car enthusiasts at the time to be poor mens' Porsches.

1949-1965 Porsche 356. Much more than streamlined souped-up Volkswagens, these early Porsches were to become legends in their own time, especially on the race tracks of the world. I owned a '55 Speedster, and two 356SCs: a coupe and a cabriolet. I wish I still had 'em.They were beautifully built, and ran well, but you froze in the winter because the heaters were awful.

1949 Jaguar XK-120, 140, 150. Just about the sexiest looking cars ever mass-produced. Visually, they made the above mentioned Porsches look like eunuchs. They were also terrifically fast. In the fifties, Jaguar, using modified XK-120 engines, won the LeMans race three years in a row. I had a 120 Coupe and an XK-140MC Roadster. They didn't start when it was below 27 degrees, overheated when it was above 78 degrees, but I put up with their British idiosyncracies because they were, oh, so beautiful! And they look even better today.

1955 Mercedes 300 SL coupe and roadster. Very important cars. The Mercedes post-war statement was "We're back, and ready to kick ass"; both magnificent animals, and the best of their breed. Every car enthusiast I know has always lusted after these cars, but by 1955 standards, they were expensive – $7,500 new! I never owned one, but did use one for a week, because of all things it was being used in a Volkswagen print ad and commercial for Doyle, Dane, Burnbach. Ran the tail off the car, and loved just climbing in and out of the Gullwing.

1961-1967 Jaguar XK-E. No one ever thought Jaguar could make a sexier car than the XK-120 series, but they certainly outdid themselves with the XK-E. When first introduced, the projectile-shaped beauty blew car enthusiasts' minds. It was also one of the fastest cars in the world, and was a performance bargain at $5,500. FOB NY. I never owned an E type, having had the use of a free one. I helped do the advertising for Hertz-Rent-A-Car, and believe it or not, they had a fleet of XK-Es, along with Rent-A-Shelby Mustangs. Those were crazy days in the car rental business.

1965 Shelby Mustang. As mentioned above, this was one crazy and wild car. I told the guys at Hertz they were crazy to rent that thing. It was noisy, and had cintered metallic brake linings that simply would not stop the car until they were warm. (In traffic, I always drove the car with my foot on the brake pedal, to keep them hot!) A super fast muscle car, like nothing that has ever been available for rent again. People used to rent them and take them to the drag strip!

1955-1957 Chevrolet. I don't know what it is about those years, but GM just got it right. These cars sum-up the be-bop, walla,walla, bang, bang look of many of the wonderful fifties American cars.

1959 Cadillac. When talking about the fifties, special mention must go to the big tailfinned Caddys. Totally outrageous and totally correct for the era. Whenever I see a beautifully restored '59 Caddy, I smile and think to myself, Elvis and Marilyn have never left the building.

All Ferraris ever built. These are simply the cars to have. The GTOs are untouchable at over $3,000,000. (I was once offered one for $7,500!) But there are many twelve cylinder models that can be bought for under $50,000. They are all the best of the best; Italian gold.

In a perfect world we would all drive twelve Cylinder Ferrari's, and we and the cars would never get old. Too bad humans can't be restored...more on choice collector cars next week.

ART COMMENTARY

With Marion Wolberg Weiss

THE ART SCENE: FAR FROM THE HAMPTONS ART IN FREDERICK, MARYLAND
(last of a series devoted to art in diverse places)

Who says you can't go home again? While "The Art Scene" series has traveled far and wide, it ends where this critic grew up, in the historic yet sleepy town of Frederick, Maryland. Celebrated by a John Greenleaf Whittier poem, it still has those famous church spirals alongside Civil and Revolutionary War haunts, but it's now the second largest city in Maryland, next to Baltimore. Talk about changes.

Art galleries and artists were nonexistant as recent as fifteen years ago. Now it's a haven for all sorts of creative people, although Frederick is still not as popular with artists as it should be, considering its proximity to Washington, D.C. and its beautiful high and low terrains: the Blue Ridge Mountains and Middletown Valley.

R. Kaiktsian's "Succos"

Nevertheless, The Artists' Gallery and The Delaplaine Visual Arts Education Center reflect art's presence in a town which has neglected creative endeavors for way too long. A recent exhibit at The Artists' Gallery, a cooperative venue located in the historic district, demonstrated diversity of subject matter and materials. While not all of the artists seemed equally skilled, favorites included Doug Moulden's acrylics on plywood which resembed tapestry by Sag Harbor artist, Pam Topham.

The ten year-old Delaplaine Center, located in Frederick's renovated Carrol Creek area, featured their student art show ("Another Class Act") with effective work by Jeff Bohlander and interesting jewelry by Beth Carey's students.

However, a real surprise awaited those who ventured to another room, where a semi-permanent collection by Reginia and Jack Kaiktsian was showing. Ms. Kaiktsian's work is clearly influenced by her own provocative life experiences: her study with Morris Lewis; her journey from Nazi-occupied Germany to the United States; her profound attraction to myth and folk lore.

Consider her patchwork doll, an homage to East Hampton artist Alex Russo's war poem about Bosnia which inspired this folk-like painting, "Shattered Childhood Dreams." Another piece, "Succos," reflects the artist's cultural tradition. There are still other impressive odes to Morris Lewis' overlapping color and stripes.

Jack Kaiktsian's work is seemingly less derivative than his wife's and also more abstract, yet it's no less impressive. His command of media, particularly the brush/ink piece on cardboard, "Paradise Lost," is equally impressive, as is his acrylic, "Nakada Log."

All in all, the Delaplaine Center offered a nicely balanced presentation: young students just getting their feet wet and the Kaiktsian's work which covers a total of sixteen decades' worth of life experiences.

Honoring the Artist: Renee Reichert

Sunflowers become painter Renee Reichert, a fact that's most apparent on this week's cover (and in the accompanying photo of the artist). Naturally, the sunflowers on the cover are rendered in a somewhat surrealistic way as the blossoms turn into a fish. Conversely, the flowers are real at the Pindar Vineyards where Ms. Reichert stood having her own picture taken.

As the sunflowers illustrate, both illusion and reality are very much a part of Ms. Reichert's art. She often takes real life situations and turns them into fantasy when she's writing a children's book. For example, take her latest venture, This is the Ladder to Austin's Room.

"I made a bed for my daughter, Sarah Rose's, room," she recalls. "We called it, 'the sun and the moon bed' because I painted a sun and a moon on it. After Sarah was finished with it, we gave it to her cousin, Austin, who lives nearby. I think Sarah really missed that bed, so I wrote a book about her having a ladder and the adventures that happen along the way when she climbs it to Austin's room."

Ms. Reichert's story isn't the only thing that has had its origin in real life. Besides making beds, she and her husband, Bill, have completely restored their home; she designed it, and her husband built it. The process comes naturally to the couple. "My husband was a blacksmith for many years," Ms. Reichert explains. "Bill didn't shoe horses like most people think, however. He made objects like lighting fixtures and candle sticks. And I studied architectural design at the University of Massachusetts. After graduating, I did architectural renderings."

When asked if her children have any interest in art, Ms. Reichert is quick to answer: " My daughter is only six, but she goes to art camp. And she likes to draw the dog by actually sitting in front of it. I didn't tell her what to do. My ten year-old son, Matthew, is a good writer and can relate his art (he does 3-D sculpture) to math and science, which is really good."

Ms. Reichert's attachment to her own son and daughter perhaps impacts on the other children's book she's writing: Cat Came Back, based on a song she knew from childhood. Speaking of children, she's also an artist-in-residence at the local elementary school where she's currently working with the students building Calder-like mobiles.

While she'll always be painting and writing children's books, Ms. Reichert looks forward to sailing the new boat she and her husband just purchased, and traveling. "I'd love to go to Italy or France," she notes, "to talk about my art in other countries."

We imagine Ms. Reichert will be talking about her children's books as well. Ms. Reichert's website is: www. portfolios.com/rreichert book review: such desperate joy

While there's at least one good reason why a book review of Such Desperate Joy is especially timely now (the locally-shot film, Pollock , opens up nationwide this week), the manuscript stands on its own feet as an interesting, insightful, and even important text. Edited by Helen Harrison, Director of the Pollock- Krasner House and Study Center, the book offers much to a broad range of readers: artists, historians, collectors, Pollock's friends, and just about anyone else who wants an "easy read."

There are compelling reasons for this "easy read" characterization. First, the essays, articles, reviews, and other assorted print material are short, comprehensive and lack "academic jargon" in the few scholarly pieces that are included. Which is not to say that the material is superficial. Quite the contrary. Also lacking is the self-indulgence that is often part of essays recalling personal experiences.

Secondly, the diverse material keeps the reader's interest: Pollock's letters; poems inspired by him; family photographs; and pictures of his paintings/drawings all furnish a "wholeness" to Pollock's life and art.

Thirdly, and perhaps most salient of all, is the reason why the short, diverse material works well. It's the old adage, "Content equals form." That Jackson Pollock was an enigmatic figure is made clear in the opening two essays by Ed Harris and Helen Harrison. Thus, the idea that no one can really know the "whole" Pollock is reinforced by the book's short documents — responses to Pollock's life and art based on "individual attitudes, conjectures, speculations and suppositions." Simply stated, material is based on singular perspectives, each of which contributes a puzzle piece to Pollock's persona.

As far as content itself goes, there's much to learn between the covers. In a word, there's something for everyone. Yet, some information was particularly relevant to this critic's concerns and interests. Photographer Hans Namuth's account of the film he made with Pollock resonates authenticity and significance; it is at the movie's completion, in fact, that Pollock falls off the wagon after two years.. The same scene is shown in Ed Harris' film, although it's suggested there that Pollock's sudden drinking spree resulted from his not being able to cope with the control Namuth had exerted over him.

The origin of Pollock's art also held special interest, specifically how Surrealism and Indian sand painting impacted on his work. How Pollock's apparent spontaneity influenced other art forms, or at least coexisted with them, was also relevant to this writer's own artistic pursuits. (This especially includes Happenings and Method Acting although a reference to acting was not featured in the book.)

Finally, there are passages to be found that shed light on Pollock in unique ways, that strike this reader as particularly moving and insightful. Dan Miller (Pollock's grocer and friend) said this about Lee Krasner's devotion to Pollock: "I thought to myself more than once, 'Well, Lee, I wouldn't drive with that son-of-a-gun, I'd get up and walk off' – but she didn't. I liked her a lot too."

–Marion Wolberg Weiss

Helen Harrison will be reading excerpts from the book, Such Desperate Joy*, at Canio's on Saturday, February 17 at 6PM. Note: The stars of "Pollock," Ed Harris and Marcia Gay Harden, have just been nominated for Academy Awards.*

silvia lehrer's cooking column

Hot and steamy soups and casseroles take over our daily food fare on chilly winter days. Yet winter offers a whole season's worth of sturdy salad greens. And salads can be more than just summer flora.

The winter garden is full of wonderful salad fixings, such as endive, radicchio, watercress, green beans, potatoes etc.

A robust endive and radicchio salad with buttery sautéed walnuts and rich Gorgonzola cheese in a walnut dressing is more appropriate to winter than in the heat of the summer. A mixed green salad in a light vinaigrette becomes the base for luscious round disks of potatoes Anna and a puree of lemony Roquefort cheese, with its complex spicy flavor, deliciously dresses crisp green beans and peppery endive leaves for a fabulous first course.

Winter has its own delicious pleasures and our salad bowl runneth over with them.

ENDIVE AND RADICCHIO SALAD WITH WALNUTS AND GORGONZOLA

The colorful greens with buttery walnuts and a rich cheese make an appropriate salad in winter.
Serves 4-6

2 heads endive, leaves separated, washed and dried
1 head radicchio, leaves separated, washed and dried
2 shallots, finely chopped
2 tablespoons sherry vinegar
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
1/4 cup walnut oil
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
1/2 cup walnuts, coarsely chopped
1/4 pound Gorgonzola, crumbled

1. Wash and spin-dry salad greens and place in a large salad bowl.

2. Mix shallots, sherry vinegar, salt and pepper to taste and toss to mix. Whisk in the walnut oil until mixture is homogeneous and set aside.

3. In a small skillet melt butter and saute walnuts for a 2-3 minutes until lightly toasted.

4. Pour dressing over the greens, add toasted walnuts and toss to mix. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Divide the salad among 4-6 plates. Sprinkle with crumbled Gorgonzola and serve.

To Prepare Ahead: Follow step 1 up to one day ahead. Wrap in paper towels and secure in a zip-lock plastic bag. Refrigerate overnight. Bring to room temperature and complete steps 2-4 before serving.

GREEN SALAD WITH WARM POTATOES ANNA

This simple green salad topped with a golden disks of crisp, thinly sliced potatoes makes an elegant first course.
Serves 6

For the salad
6 cups mixed salad greens such as red leaf or oak lettuce, arugula, watercress, mache
2-3 shallots, finely chopped
2 tablespoons red wine vinegar
Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper
5-6 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil

For Potatoes Anna
4 tablespoons unsalted butter
2 pounds russet potatoes
Coarse (kosher) salt

1. Prepare greens: Wash each lettuce separately, spin-dry and carefully roll up in paper towels to absorb excess moisture. Put into plastic bags and refrigerate. They will remain fresh and crisp for several hours or overnight.

2. Prepare vinaigrette: Place shallots in a mixing bowl. Add vinegar, salt and pepper and stir to mix. Drizzle in oil while stirring with a fork or whisk until mixture is homogeneous. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary.
Set aside.

Preheat oven to 450 degrees.

3. Soften half the butter and, with back of spoon or fingertips, spread six 3 inch circles on a cookie sheet. Melt remaining butter in a saucepan and set aside.

4. Peel the potatoes, then rinse and pat dry with paper toweling. Slice into paper thin rounds, about 1/16 inch thick. (Can be done in a food processor using the thin slicing blade and very little pressure.) Arrange potatoes in neat, overlapping circles on the buttered cookie sheet and press down firmly. Drizzle the remaining butter over each circle of potatoes and sprinkle lightly with salt.

5. Place in preheated oven and bake about 15-20 minutes until potatoes are crisp and golden brown.

6. About five minutes before the potatoes are done, toss the greens with the vinaigrette until well coated. Divide the greens on 6 salad plates. With a metal spatula, carefully loosen the bottom of the potatoes and arrange over the greens. Serve immediately.

HARICOT VERTE, ENDIVE AND ROQUEFORT SALAD

I can't think of another dish that awakens taste buds more than this terribly French appetizer salad. Haricot Verte, originally a French import, are much thinner, shorter and more delicate than our familiar string bean. They are available much the year round.
Yield: 4-6 servings

1/2 pound whole haricot verte or thin green beans, Coarse salt
1 Belgian endive, fresh and crisp without bruises
1/4 pound Roquefort cheese
2 tablespoons lemon juice

1. Wash haricot verte or green beans and remove stem ends. Bring 1 quart water to a boil, add a teaspoon or so of salt, then put in the beans. With cover ajar, cook in briskly simmering water for 2-3 minutes*. Drain in a colander and quickly refresh under a spray of cold running water. Transfer to a clean kitchen towel and pat dry to absorb excess moisture. Allow beans to cool completely, place in a mixing bowl and set aside.

2. Wash endive and pat dry. Pull off 6-8 outer leaves of the endive and set aside. Slice the remaining endive into 1/4-inch ringlets and add to the cool green beans.

3. Put the Roquefort in a mixing bowl and mash with the tines of a fork. Add the lemon juice and whip the mixture until creamy (It should still be a little chunky) and the lemon juice is completely absorbed. This cheese tends to be salty and the lemon will take out some of the saltiness. With a rubber spatula scrape the dressing into the bean and endive mixture and toss gently to mix. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary.

4. For individual servings place 1 or 2 endive leaves pointed end out on small plates then equally divide and mound the mixture over the base of the leaves. Serve at room temperature.

Note* If using green beans cook 4-7 minutes depending on maturity of the beans.

To Prepare Ahead
Follow steps 1-3 up to several hours ahead. Refrigerate separately in suitable containers and complete step 4 before serving.

Dining IN THE HAMPTONS

Bobby Vans
Main Street, Bridgehampton
537-0590

After a day of dealing with the latest snow storm, it was a delightful change to treat myself to an evening meal at Bobby Vans. A Hampton's tradition since 1969, my companions and I found a quiet cozy evening within the walls of this piano bar/restaurant. Bobby Vans has been a well known as a first rate New York City Steak house. During its earlier inception across the street from its present location on Main Street in Bridgehampton, Bobby Vans was a place for the artistic heart playing host to local musicians, writers and artists. Local artwork is still showcased regularly on the walls. During the warm summer months, the front doors open and you can enjoy an open air environment much as you would find in the old French Bistros.

We were welcomed by Kristen and escorted to our table, with no delay. As we sat, I noticed how a welcome was being waved to us in unison by the sail clad ceiling fans.

Our waiter Rich, was well informed and truly added to the light hearted warmth of the evening. We were then provided a wine list but we followed our friendly steward's direction and started the evening with a Baron de Rothchild Bordeaux, which was an excellent choice.

This was a Tuesday evening and despite it being mid-week, so many were there enjoying the atmosphere. We then laid down our challenge that we would like to see the chef's showcase. Executive Chef John R. Stella who has returned to Bobby Vans after several years with Smith and Wallenski, presented us with the evenings menu.

Our first course started with P.E.I. mussels and capaccio of tuna. The capaccio of tuna was served with a carrot and daikon radish salad base with rice wine vinegar and wasabe paste on the side. The dish was garnished with green caviar topping and homemade potato waffle chips to the side. This was a dish that was welcomed by all not only for its unique presentation but for its blend of differing tastes. Despite the apparent disappearance of the mussels, the tuna was the clear favorite of the table for this course and we awaited anxiously to see what will be served next.

Our next course brought a dish of crab cake with mustard remoulade, duck strudel served with julienne vegetables wrapped in phyllo, and smoked salmon and montrachet napoleon. The duck strudel was my own personal favorite and found the accents on the vegetables delicious. But the prize of the night was the smoked salmon and montrachet napoleon. This delicate tier of food was served with goat cheese, pine nuts, and caramelized onions. You could see the precision with which the chef took to prepare this dish. All of us at the table felt it was almost too beautiful to take part in. But luckily looks and taste go hand in hand and it was soon gone.

Next we were served the entrees. First we were given a dish of seared tuna with wasabi mashed potatoes and miso vinaigrette. This dish also included a deep fried collection of bok choy. Next came the pan roasted monkfish with lobster risotto and a curry vinaigrette then to be followed steamed Chilean Sea served with soba noodles in a lemon grass fish broth and vegetables. This sea bass was a perfect balance of tastes with the fish being accompanied by the lemon grass broth. All dishes were enjoyed by myself and my companions.

Prior to dessert we were informed about Bobby Vans Prix Fixe Menu dinners. From Sunday through Friday, 5:30 p.m. to 7:00 p.m., Bobby Vans is serving a three course meal for just $25.00. Additionally there is steak night that is held on Tuesday and Wednesday nights where you can get a great steak meal for $16.50. This means for $25.00/plus tax or less, you could enjoy a dinner from one of the east end's best hot spots.

Our waiter Rich, prompt as usual, made sure we were all set up with coffee and teas prior to the arrival of the desserts. Luckily we still had some room left for them, because they were all sinfully delicious. It was one of those experiences were you could feel the pounds forming but the food was so wonderful you didn't care. First we were served a warm apple betty ala Mode, followed by a white chocolate moose set in a cup of formed hard chocolate and based in a strawberry sauce. And last but not least, the personal favorite of this coffee slave, was the chocolate cappuccino ice cream. As I said before all were equally delicious and was a perfect finishing touch for this delightful experience.

Overall, the food was delicious, with a wide range from the dangerously exotic to wonderful mainstay dishes. With the great service provided by the staff and the gentle warmth of the surroundings, all made for an evening this writer will not soon forget.

It's Our Garden WITH ELIZABETH AND CROW MILLER

Here's a system that can give you three successive pickings from a single planting of peas. Elizabeth and I grow our peas in double rows, back-to-back, staked and wire-supported 2 to 3 feet off the ground.

In addition to producing healthier plants, this method makes feeding and mulching easier. Picking, once a tedious chore, is now a pleasant operation because you don't have to bend over so much and the pea-filled pods hang where you can see them without peering and hunting.

We plant drought and wilt resistant varieties, using both the dwarf and taller late producers which permit successive crops, plus interplanting with corn and tomatoes. Because peas prefer cool weather, they should be started as soon as the ground is workable. We keep our soil well-prepared in advance, tilling, in fall, under green manures, shredded leaves and old mulches ahead of the season. We also sprinkle limestone every other year as a blender of soil nutrients.

Peas are a short-time crop, and since we want to keep our organic garden working all the time, we plant them in twin rows 5 inches apart, leaving 3 to 4 feet between the double rows, so corn and tomatoes will be able to take over when they are through. When the peas reach the tendril stage, 8 to 10 inches tall, it is time to start staking them out.

We collect and save spoiled hay for mulching. When we use hay or straw for mulching, we finish putting down the mulch and then we add cottonseed and soybean meals at a rate of 3 pounds per 100-square feet.

After cutting the weeds with a hoe, we sprinkle the area with bone meal, granite dust and compost, working the additives into the soil and taking care not to disturb the root systems.

Between the twin rows, we erect the wire fence, starting at either end, and use the wooden stakes to anchor it in place. We weave the stakes through the wire strands, thrusting them one foot into the ground, and spacing them at 3 foot intervals. If necessary, we reinforce the structure by weaving the wire and wood together.

Taking care not to injure the young plants, we slip the laths behind them and lift the vines up off the ground and against the wire. We keep the laths in place by thrusting several sticks behind them into the ground. Later, when the tendrils take hold, we carefully remove the laths and store them for next year.

After working along the second twin row in the same way and securing the vines, we side dress the rows, working bonemeal and compost into the soil. Finally, we mulch the entire area to a depth of 3 to 4 inches, completely covering the soil right up to the plants.

The same method can be used for the late, tall varieties, with 40 inch stock wire and longer, heavier stakes set 4 to 6 feet apart, depending on the length and height of the row. The most important part is the careful handling of the tender young pea vines so they are not injured or torn.

Our pea patch is now left alone to bear and produce until picking time. It is good to check the rows, and pick an occasional weed thrusting through the mulch and to secure sagging parts of vine with whip-cuttings. When the vines are through bearing, they are pulled up and used on the spot as mulch for subsequent plantings.

Peas are legumes and legumes work in harmony with a group of bacteria which live symbiotically on their roots. These bacteria do the actual job of taking gaseous nitrogen from the air and fixing or concentrating it in pink root nodules which then slough off, adding nitrogen (N) to the soil in a form plants can take up as nutrients. Properly innoculated legumes can generate up to 300 pounds of useable protein-based nitrogen (N) per acre.

HEALTH & BEAUTY

Lasers And Microdermabrasion: Beauty's Helpers

Fortunately lasers can now eliminate unwanted facial and body hair in both men and women. This method is a safe, fast and affordable procedure that is FDA approved for permanent hair reduction. Lasers eradicate unwanted hair by targeting the melanin in the hair follicle. A small hand piece is placed near the skin and the laser pulses are absorbed by the pigment in the hair follicle for a fraction of a second. A focused beam of light destroys the hair and disables the follicle but the surrounding skin is not damaged.

Any area of the body can be treated. Popular sites include the upper lip, bikini area, underarms, chest, back and legs. Laser hair removal treatment is ideally performed in a medical office under the supervision of a physician who understands your health history as hair growth can be related to other medical issues. Laser hair removal is now a more convenient alternative to older methods and a more permanent way to get rid of unwanted hair and achieve the smooth skin we all want.

Some lasers can also be used to effectively treat and remove leg veins. Spider veins on the legs, which are purple in color and medium sized blue leg veins can be treated with excellent results. The laser wavelength used for treating veins causes the vein to collapse and shrivel. Over the next several weeks the vein disappears and new healthy veins grow. One to four treatments spaced eight to twelve weeks apart may be required. Laser vein removal works well in most cases, however large or bulging leg veins are not effectively treated with this method and usually require surgical removal.

Microdermabrasion, sometimes referred to as "the lunchtime peel," is exfoliation of the skin. Microdermabrasion treatments result in rejuvenation of aged skin and improvement in the appearance of fine lines, wrinkles, sun damage, skin discoloration, acne prone skin, blackheads, whiteheads and some scars. The procedure involves the use of minute-crystals that are sprayed with a precise amount of force over the surface of the skin. The crystals are then vacuumed off along with the accumulation of dead skin cells resulting in the disappearance of an otherwise dull or sallow look. Microdermabrasion is a safe, non-surgical approach to skin care, without the use of chemicals or acid. Results are cumulative and improvement increases with the number of treatments. After a treatment, one generally notices an improvement in the skin texture. Age spots and acne scars are less obvious. Fine lines are erased and most patients report that their skin seems softer, tighter, smoother and younger looking.

Microdermabrasion is safe on any skin color or type. Treatments are performed in less than thirty minutes and can be done on almost any part of the body. After the treatment you can expect your skin to have a pink glow that usually lasts from thirty minutes to six hours. Additional treatments are recommended one to two weeks later depending on the desired goal. Most people notice some improvement after one treatment but results are cumulative and multiple treatment plans are designed with this concept in mind. Many people like to have maintenance microdermabrasion treatments each season to keep skin healthy and glowing. The microdermabrasion procedure is ideal for the busy person who wants to improve their appearance. It is an exciting treatment for improving the appearance and tone of the skin.

There are now medically based home skincare programs, which can dramatically improve the appearance of skin and reduce wrinkles, acne scars and skin discoloration. Resurfacing agents such as advanced glycolic-based products, lipid soluble vitamin C products and antioxidants are used to reduce fine line and wrinkles, lift and tighten the skin, and help prevent environmental damage to healthy skin cells. These products, many of which are available only through physician offices, can stimulate skin to appear clearer, younger, smoother and healthier looking.

POLICE BLOTTER

If at first you don't get caught, try again and again and again. The man who allegedly pulled off bank robberies in Bridgehampton and Southampton and then in Nassau last month has been apprehended after, yes, robbing yet another bank in Nassau County. Terry A. Jones was apprehended by police after robbing the Chase Bank in West Hempstead. In all four robberies Mr. Jones allegedly presented a note to a teller that he had a gun, though when he was apprehended he was unarmed. He had been living for in East Hampton since 1995 after moving out east from New York City, where he had been on parole. Mr. Jones now could face a seven year prison term for each of the robberies.

Bad habits start young. A fifteen year old Riverhead boy was arrested for driving while intoxicated and for driving without a license. The judge, not looking kindly on this, sentenced the youth to sixty days in jail and three years probation.

Cryptic warnings... A man on the Sag Harbor Turnpike told police an unknown party let the air out of all the tires of his '86 Honda and that there was a note on his windshield that said "Cuidate"; the man said this meant he should "be careful."

* * *

But everything looked fine to me, offficer.... Two motorists in two separate incidents chose the wrong side of the road to drive on. A Riverhead resident was arrested by Southampton Village Police as he was driving on the wrong side of Country Road 39. The driver was, not surprisingly, drunk. In the second incident, the Village Police arrested a wrong-side-of-the-road-driver on Windmill Lane. This was also a DWI.

In Sagaponack, someone is in possession of a stolen Winchester shotgun and a Smith & Wesson .38 caliber. The armaments in question had been stolen from a basement workshop at a house on Sagg Main Road some time during a party attended by twenty to twenty-five teenagers.

A Springs resident told East Hampton Police that someone had broken his window and windowpane with a rock flung from a slingshot. David looking for Goliath?

Another Springs resident told police that someone had broken into her house, deleted messages from her answering machine, stole medication intended for her dogs and, to top it off, threw magazines in the toilet.

A home in Northwest had a barbeque grill and a wine refrigerator stolen from the garage. Sounds like the thief is gearing up for summer.

Dan's LETTERS

THANKS, MARION
Dear Dan,

Many thanks for using my painting "The Boathouse" on your November 10 cover. I have received some very good feedback. Also, I want to commend Marion Wolberg Weiss on her excellent article. I feel I have been included in a stellar group or artists.

INTIMIDATED IN SAG HARBOR
Dear Dan,

In your paper dated January 19, 2001 your editorial dealt with "how crowded the East End is and what can be done about it." I think the town of Sag Harbor has solved some of the problems. Have eight to ten brown uniformed traffic officers' march up and down the double yellow line in the center of the road. When you park your car, encircle it and try your best to find something wrong, so they can ticket it. In other words, intimidate you. I would venture to say that Sag Harbor gives out more tickets than any other "East End" town. Their methods worked for me. I for one, and some of my friends, will not go back to Sag Harbor. Why spend my money where I'm not welcomed.

IF YOU'RE SHORT, DON'T SIT DOWN
Dear Dan,

We read your great article Tall in the February 2, issue. We are a not-for-profit club with open membership to all tall people living in Nassau, Suffolk and/or New York City called the Tall Club of Long Island. We will be meeting on Monday, March 5, 2001 at Monroe's in the Holiday Inn at LIE exit 46 - Plainview at 8 p.m. The minimum age is twenty-one, men must be six feet two inches or taller and women five feet ten inches or taller. There is a five-dollar fee for non-members. Anyone interested can call 516-3320.

Dear Dan,

I would like to commend you on your website. Everytime I open it, it has something new and interesting. I especially love the animations, and the cover. Keep up the good work, I am a big fan and can't get through the weekend without reading your paper.

Record Hampton Home Sales

An astonishing $1.82 billion in home sales were recorded in the Hamptons in 2000. The majority of this amount was accounted for by home purchases of a $1 million or more, putting the average price for a home in the Hamptons at $669,000, an increase of 42 percent over the $464,000 home price average of 1999, when there were $1.25 billion.

Of the 2,700 homes sold last year, those in the $2 million of more category were 151 in number, up from 89 in 1999, an increase of 42.5 percent. On the other hand, sales under $500,000 dropped by 21.2 percent, from 2,010 to 1,658.

The top markets and their average home prices were: East Hampton Village, $1.74 million; Southampton Village, $1.3 million; Bridgehampton, $1.8 million; and Amagansett, $1.06 million. Amagansett saw the largest percentage increase in home value, with sales prices rising 99.8 percent from $580,000 in 1999. Shelter Island saw an increase almost as startling; its sales prices went from an average of $318,000 to more than $530,000, an increase of 98.3 percent. Westhampton was not far behind: average sales prices went up 92.6 percent, from $283,000 in 1999 to $545,000 in 2000.
